Summary of key findings for parents

This provision is outstanding

- Consultation with children is exceptional. Children's views are listened to as they actively make decisions during weekly meetings. This contributes significantly towards their engagement, high levels of interest and enthusiasm.
- The experienced and inspirational provider and dedicated staff who share the same vision are extremely proactive. Self-evaluation is sharply focused. The strong desire to achieve excellence has helped them to achieve outstanding quality since registration.
- Well-qualified staff use their excellent skills and knowledge to provide children with a superb range of inspiring and captivating experiences. Activities are extremely well planned, to build on children's prior skills and complement their learning in school.
- Children arrive in high spirits and their laughter is heard throughout the club. Children of all ages play together exceptionally well. Children are regularly rewarded with certificates. They delight as they are awarded the accolade of being promoted to a 'fun star' where they are given additional responsibilities. Children's behaviour is exemplary.
- Partnership with the host school is first rate. Highly effective methods are used to share meaningful information on a regular basis. This contributes towards an outstanding level of continuity that helps to support children's care and learning in school.

What the setting needs to do to improve further

To further improve the quality of the early years provision the provider should:

- continue to build on the outstanding partnership with parents that helps to further enhance positive outcomes for children.

Inspection findings

Effectiveness of the leadership and management is outstanding

The arrangements for safeguarding are effective. Leaders are extremely knowledgeable. They ensure that staff have a thorough understanding of their roles and responsibilities to keep children safe. This helps to protect children's welfare. Staff receive a superb level of support. All staff have a meticulous programme for their own professional development. Leaders observe their practice and provide regular meetings and training opportunities. This helps staff to continue to improve their already excellent skills and knowledge. Parents are extremely complimentary about the excellent experiences that children receive. Staff truly value and encourage parental involvement and understand the vital role that they play. Leaders recognise the importance of continuing to look at ways to involve parents to maintain the exceptional continuity of care and learning for all children.

Quality of teaching, learning and assessment is outstanding

Staff complete extremely comprehensive observations on children to identify their skills and interests. They find out school themes and plan a range of inspiring activities which motivates children to become involved. Staff provide a delightful activity where children have opportunities to make predictions about how fast water will travel through a funnel. Following an interest in space, staff offer a variety of craft materials and children make models. This contributes immensely towards their creativity and imagination. Young boys delight in making jet packs. They capably attach bottles to boxes and use string for the handles. Children develop excellent mathematical skills. Staff expertly use children's ball games to encourage counting. Children enthusiastically invite staff to join in with a role-play game at the vets. They confidently recognise numbers as they add and subtract role-play money and use stamps to record the date on receipts. Children display very strong literacy skills. They form recognisable letters as staff skilfully encourage them to record instructions about how to care for the pets. This helps to support their writing in school.

Personal development, behaviour and welfare are outstanding

Children's emotional well-being is superbly promoted. Staff know each child individually and play with them with great enthusiasm and care. Younger children are collected from their classrooms and older children are highly confident. They independently make their way to the club after school. Children's physical health is given the utmost priority. Snack times are a highly social occasion where staff teach children the importance of making healthy food choices. Even younger children independently help themselves to a splendid range of healthy foods and drinks. Children eagerly explore the superb outdoor environment and delight in active, energetic play. They develop an excellent sense of empathy and consideration for others. For example, children participate in a number of fundraising activities throughout the year. Children are extremely proud of their community. They are full of pride as they talk about their recent participation in the local carnival and delight in showing the award certificate and trophy.
